DAVIDSON ON FARMER TRUST

Governor Talks To The Tobacco Growers' Convention In Madison Yesterday.

TELLS THEM THEY SHOULD UNITE

Speaks Of The Combination Of Capital, And Says That The Farmers Have The Same Right To Protect Themselves.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]
Madison, Wis., Oct. 8.—"Let the farmers of the state learn from the methods of the manufacturing corporations," declared Governor J. O. Davidson to the Wisconsin Tobacco Growers' association, in convention here. "The corporations are organized; why not the farmers? The manufacturers watch the market and at times put forth concerted efforts to raise prices; why not the manufacturers of corn and grain and tobacco? The trusts act together to get favorable legislation from congress; why should not the farmers do likewise? The corporations are always holding meetings and making arrangements among themselves so that they may get the most for their goods; why should not the producers on the farms of the country act together to at least help to make the prices of the commodities which their effort with the help of God brings into existence?"

—The convention is the tobacco growers' branch of the American Society of Equity, which proposes that the farmers combine to hold their crops from the market until the prices are sufficiently high.

The governor also praised the farmers for being reliable men in politics and called upon them to see to it that good men were elected to office and that they keep close watch of legislators and defeat any who might prove unfaithful to their trust. He entered into a defense of the last Wisconsin legislature, which made records for long session and unprecedented large appropriations, the governor declaring that he believed all the laws enacted to be wise and all the appropriations made in wisdom and for necessary purposes, particularly those for the comfort and care of the inmates of the state prison and charitable institutions, which had been, he said, neglected for a number of years.

MASS MEETING TO CINCH THE ROAD

HELD AT MILTON THIS AFTER-NOON AT FOUR O'CLOCK.

MILTON IS ENTHUSIASTIC

Mr. Zigler and Mr. Jacks Asked to Be Present at the Gathering—Delegation to Be Appointed.

This afternoon at four o'clock a mass-meeting was held in Milton to consider the new method of improving upon the gentlemen who are considering building an interurban road to Madison from this city, the advisability of running the line via Milton. Mr. Davis of Milton called on Mr. Thos. Jacks of this town, and H. H. Zigler of Columbus, Ohio, who represent the promoters of the enterprise, and made arrangements with them to meet a committee of twenty-five from Milton this afternoon to listen to the benefits which the road would derive from going through that village. Later he telephoned asking the gentlemen to come to Milton to be present at a mass-meeting to be held there at four this afternoon.

Another Auto Ride
On Tuesday Mr. Zigler and Mr. Jacks went over the route between Janesville and Madison by auto again. This time they went by way of Indian Ford, thence to Edgerton and then veered off going up through Albion to Madison and around a portion of Lake Mendota. They returned by way of Oregon, Brooklyn and Evansville and then directly to Janesville.

Looks Favorable
So favorable does the proposition appear to Mr. Zigler and Mr. Jacks that they have telegraphed for other members of the company that plan to finance the company to come to Janesville and it is expected they will be here tonight or tomorrow.

Route in Doubt
Thus far the route is still in doubt. It is possible that the line will be run via Milton and Milton Junction, although this has not been determined upon. This route is slightly further, but it would connect a rapidly increasing territory to the line and would avoid difficult grades should the route up the river be followed.

Further North
Mr. Zigler has carefully investigated the various routes during his sojourn here this past summer and waits for an expert engineer's opinion before announcing definitely where the line will run after leaving Edgerton and Stoughton. The Clough survey was on the east side of Lake Kegonsa and the Montgomery line on the west side. Both routes have been investigated.

Entering Madison
The route from Lake Kegonsa will depend largely upon which side of the lake the tracks are laid. On the west side it might run through Albion, Oregon and Keosauqua into Madison from the southwest. If on the east side of the lake it would pass through Mr. Farland and thence either into Madison over the Montgomery tracks or come in on its own right-of-way, crossing the Yabarra near the Fuller & Johnson works, and with a terminal near the Capital Park.

Much to Be Done
Should the company now looking over the field decide upon a road there will be much to be done before work can commence. A company must be organized and under the new Public Utility law will have to petition the Federal Commission for a franchise. This will mean that all the surveys will have to be made, the right-of-way mapped out before the fact be determined whether the road will be built or not.

The bride and groom will be attended by Miss Gustie Walters of Packwaukee, Wis., and Mr. Frank Stinehouse of Montello. The ceremony will be pronounced by the Rev. The bride having made her home in this city the past 2½ years is well known and a highly respected young lady possessed of innumerable friends, and the groom is a popular and worthy young man, having lived in this city all his lifetime, being employed as shipping clerk at the Cheate-Hollister furniture factory.

Washington, D. His promotion to be brigadier general was during the present year.

Pond du Lac, Wis., Oct. 8.—That Sunday baseball and other sports enjoyed by working-men on Sunday were largely the cause of so many criminals in our midst was the contention of Rev. J. D. Davidson of Milwaukee in a short address before the Wisconsin Baptist Ministerial Union in session at the present time. A resolution was adopted to increase the pastors' salaries owing to increased cost of living.

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS.]
Columbus, O., Oct. 8.—Mrs. Cassie Chadwick is today reported worse, her condition being now admitted to be serious. She lies in her bed in the prison hospital seemingly indifferent to her fate, racked with pain, and apparently resigned to her fast approaching end. Her physical weakness is showing its effect upon her mind, she being at intervals wholly irrational. Mrs. Chadwick is a mere wreck of the woman arrested for conspiracy to wreck the Oberlin bank four years ago. She confessed the Roman Catholic faith yesterday and the rite of baptism was administered to her by Father Kelly, the Catholic prison chaplain.

A Witty Diagnosis.

The object of the duel is said to be the healing of wounded honor. To try to cure a wound of the spirit, or rather the temper, by a scratch on the skin savors of homeopathy, but may perhaps be justified by the surgical principle of relieving tension by incision.—British Medical Journal.

THE TIME TO HUSTLE

The man who sits around and waits for trade to come to him, is doomed to disappointment, for while he is waiting some enterprising fellow gets up and goes after it.

Doing business, in these progressive days, means more than having a stock of goods in store, with a sign displayed, announcing who they belong to. The people don't care whether John Smith attempts to run a store or a farm, in fact they have no interest in John Smith, unless he has something to sell at a bargain, which they want, and then they don't know anything about it, unless he makes the fact known.

Some merchants seem to be satisfied when they are "holding their own," in business. They fail to take into account the fact that the same volume of sales today represents less goods than two years ago, because prices are higher, and the purchasing power of money proportionately reduced.

Unless the volume of business has increased from 10 to 20 per cent, a falling off in trade has occurred, and this is never a pleasant thing to contemplate.

The man who has reached the height of ambition in business, should be ready to retire from the field, and make room for an enterprising successor.

The dead merchant is a detriment to any community, and especially in these times of great prosperity when hustling for business brings larger returns than ever before.

The time to hustle is always now; not at the close of the season when a lot of unsaleable goods are carried over and then forced on the market at half price, but now, while the goods are fresh, and when they will sell at a profit.

There are stacks of goods mouldering in basements and attics, which might have been converted into money long ago had they been offered to the public when reasonable and in style. Don't wait until January to sell goods at a loss, which can be sold today at a profit if properly advertised.

The most effective way to reach the trade is to take a horse and buggy and call on the people with samples and prices. If every merchant in town would do this, he would increase his trade 25 per cent in 30 days.

But this is impractical, and the next best medium is the family newspaper which goes into the home every day, and which is religiously read. The Gazette is this kind of a paper, and it brings results invariably.

This doesn't mean that all newspaper advertising pays, for it doesn't, because some of it is so injudicious that it isn't worth the space it occupies.

But intelligent advertising which says something about the goods and always names a price, is as sure to win as time is to pass. If you don't believe it, watch the Port, Bailey & company silk sale, now being advertised, and you will discover that every lady in town is posted, and you will find a multitude of them in the store while the sale is progressing.

If you want to test it, in a small way, put a three-line ad in the want column, offering something at a bargain, and watch results. It pays to hustle for business all the time, and no businessman can afford to wait for trade which he can secure by going after it.

UNFORTUNATE SAN FRANCISCO
San Francisco is slowly recovering from the great catastrophe which demolished the city, two years ago, but the progress is badly retarded because of organized labor conditions. The city was in the hands of unionism, long before the catastrophe occurred, and, of course, the arch disturber, was largely responsible for these conditions. He succeeded in giving the city the notorious labor mayor, Schmitz, and then left him to work out his own destruction.

The era of graft, which marked the Schmitz and Ruer regime, has passed, and the city is now politically clean, but the tyranny and oppression of organized labor continues.

The eight-hour day, and exorbitant price of all kinds of skilled labor, has paralyzed many industries, and prevented others from entering the field.

The city demands all kinds of building material, and the steel and iron for structural work is so limited that an effort was recently made to establish a plant on the ground for the manufacture of steel from iron ore mined nearby.

The enterprise was promoted by Frederick Thompson of San Francisco, a practical man, who thoroughly understood the business. He succeeded in interesting eastern capital and representatives visited the city to investigate and invest.

They found conditions favorable and were ready to go ahead, when confronted by the labor problem. This was so serious that they abandoned the enterprise.

Mr. Thompson was so incensed that he wrote a letter to the San Francisco Argonaut which the paper published, and commented on as follows:

"We print an interesting letter from Mr. Frederick Thompson, showing how the situation in San Francisco, as affected by the pretensions and aggressions of organized labor, serves to bar out capital and to stifle the spirit of enterprise. The facts are very simple. Mr. Thompson is a practical man who understands the business of producing steel castings from raw material.

"He has seen in San Francisco a situation for the development of a plant which would have cost $150,000 and employed from two to three hundred men. He set about the organization of such a plant, but was prevented from carrying out his plans because those who had engaged to back him would not put their capital in a situation where it must be at the mercy of the labor tyranny in San Francisco.

"This incident is not an extraordinary one. Every week—indeed, almost every day—the Argonaut hears a similar story. The plain truth is that San Francisco is being stifled in her development by the hand of a unionism which has set up much more in other forms of expenditure. Its influence would have been felt in every avenue of local activity. Furthermore, it would have helped to sustain and maintain those general conditions which contribute to the life and welfare of a great city.

"We have lost this establishment; we are losing other similar establishments week by week; not for lack of a field, nor for lack of natural conditions and facilities, but because an arrogant, stupid, and immoral labor unionism has made a situation so unfriendly to enterprise, so unpropitious for capital, that cautious men will not venture here. It is a fact so gross and unreasonable that one's toes rise in revolt at its details."

The paper then makes the following appeal:

"How long, fellow-citizens of San Francisco, are we going to allow this sort of thing to continue? How long are we going to allow an ignorant, abandoned, and besotted unionism to write the rules of industry here, to club back from our gates those who would enter, contribute their fortunes to our activities, and assist in the work of rebuilding and re-establishing our city? How long are we going to allow a criminal and restrictive unionism to stay the progress of our city, to hold back its energies, to reduce those who would increase its vital forces, and stifle enterprise at its inception?"

"When shall we find the courage to take this evil thing by its throat, and thrust it out of the authority which it has exercised to our damage if not to our ruin? It is for the citizens of San Francisco to answer!"

There is plenty of work for the Manufacturers' association, in the ill-fated city. The only way to regulate this labor tyranny, which is throttling the life of the coast city, is to meet organization with organization, and establish the open shop, where men can work in safety. When San Francisco adopts this policy, and enforces it, prosperity will return to the city, and not before.

HALLAM'S RIDDLE

The following riddle, put forth in 1858, is again going the rounds of the press, and the claim is made that the "Living Church" has discovered the solution. It seems easy. Try it.

"I sit on a rock
While I'm raking the wind,
But the storm once abated
I'm gentle and kind;
I see kings at my feet,
Who wait but my nod,
To kneel in the dust
Which my footsteps have trod;
Though none by the world
I'm known but to few;
The Gentiles detest me;
I'm pork to the Jew;
I never have passed
But one night in the dark;
And that was with Noah,
Alone in the ark;
My weight is three pounds;
My length is a mile;
And when I'm discovered,
You'll say, with a smile,
My first and my last
Are the wish of our tale."

thing else that stands in the way of an aggressive president, are just now suffering from a grievance. Great indignation is expressed in the ranks of Mississippi pilots because of the peremptory discharge of one of their number, at the demand of the President, who claimed that he endangered life by racing with the boat which carried the presidential party south last week.

Stuntmen claim that the laws of navigation were not violated, and that the boats were not racing. Like the Brownsville affair, it will probably enter the stage of investigation, and the unfortunate pilot will be able to take a three months' vacation. The machinery of government moves slow.

The dollar country weekly will soon be nothing of the past. Print paper has advanced from 25 to 30 per cent, during the past four months, and the small weekly now costs more than a dollar a year to produce. The metropolitan papers are also badly hit by the advance, and many of them are running at a loss. The claim is made that only four of the large New York dailies are making any money.

An ancient Mexican died down in El Paso, Texas, the other day in the ripe old age of 117. He gave up whistling at the age of 100, but continued to smoke until the last, which all goes to prove that it pays to be virtuous.

'Ware the Deceys
La Crosse Tribune: We do not blush to suggest that not only is there danger of mistake through hasty adoption of a system, but that there is a possibility of certain influences and carefully working to mislead the efforts of honest advocates of river improvement. We know that railroads have spent thousands of dollars to kill river competition. It is unreasonable to expect that these same railroads will spend as many thousands to sidetrack the rejuvenation of river traffic? It is known that they have been permitted to exert a strong influence on the river conventions through their tools who have appeared as delegates, ostensibly working for real river transportation. They are always with us, always active. We must be careful not to be deceived.

TELLS TALE OF INHUMAN GREED

FLORENCE DUGAN TAKES STAND TO TESTIFY IN HER OWN BEHALF.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BEGINS

And Prisoner is Forced to Reveal Full Details of Many an Unsavory Episode.

Some question of procedure engaged the attorneys and Judge Elford for considerable time this morning, so that the trial of Florence Dugan was not opened until nearly ten o'clock. The court finally held that while the merits of the argument might be somewhat uncertain, the affidavit was on defense and that the corpus delicti was proven. On this point, Nolan had insisted, while Atty. Wheeler had held that it was not necessary. The decision resulted in Officer William Mullen being placed on the stand to testify to the circumstances of the shooting on Academy street on the night of April 18.

Instructions to Sheriff

Before the actual proceedings began, Judge Elford addressed Sheriff I. U. Fisher, requesting him to exclude those standing up from the courtroom in case of any disorder and keep out young children altogether. The admonition had a salutary effect as there was no unnecessary noise from the big gallery of perhaps 250 spectators during the entire morning.

Attorney T. S. Nolan opened the case for the defense, reminding the jurors that the prosecution had informed them that there had been assault with intent to murder and that the defense had interposed a plea of insanity. He then proceeded to outline the facts from the standpoint of the defense.

The defense was a man of about 40 years who had been divorced from a former wife at the time the offense was committed. The defendant was somewhere between 26 and 32 years of age. She was born in Iowa near the South Dakota line. Her people are poor and her father who lived in New York before he moved to Iowa is at present a tenant farmer in the town of Bradford. By reason of the financial condition of the family, the defendant was obliged to work at an early age. She was employed by L. D. Fossenden at Clinton and subsequently at Darlen, before coming to Janesville. About four years ago she met Schumaker, who was not then divorced, while he was engaged in painting at Darlen. The complaining witness boarded at the hotel where Florence Dugan was employed and in the course of their intimacy he asked her to marry him. Their intimacy continued while he staid in Darlen, and he came back from time to time, obliging her on most occasions to pay his board. Then she went to Clinton and he visited her there. During the four years he got from her by one device or another practically every cent she earned, and frequently reiterated his promise to marry her, going as far as to tell her sister that they were married. About Christmas-time, 1906, the defendant learned that he was going with another girl near Watertown. "She had given him all she had in the world and I believe she told him that if he went back on her she would kill him." About this time he was frequently in urgent need of money and when he didn't get it, he beat her and even knocked her down in the street. Two days before the shooting he beat her in her room at the Riverside hotel to get a dollar. And immediately afterward he said: "I want you to make me a free man. And when she declared that she would not, he said: 'You're crazy and you'll land in the insane asylum.' And she retorted: 'I'll see you first, before I do.' And about the same time he told her that if she didn't have $7 for him by following Saturday evening he would kill her. During the week she borrowed a revolver—she says for protection against him. Also, during that time, she was unwell and when, on the night of the tragedy, her sister came and told her that Schumaker was walking on the street with another woman, she went immediately in search of him. According to him on Academy street, she said: "George, I'd like to talk with you." And when he made the retort: "Go to hell—peck away, peck away!" she shot at him, and shot again as he fell. She said that she has been in jail, unable to give bail.

Prosecution's Statement Deferred

The attorneys for the prosecution stated that they did not care to make their statement at this time. Officer Mason related the details of the tragedy, itself, and Florence Dugan was then called to the stand. At this time Miss Ella Smith, Schumaker's companion on the night of the tragedy, was occupying a front seat in the courtroom and other parties whose names were inadvertently mentioned in the description of a sensational episode at a wine-room at Delavan, in which they, Schumaker, and the defendant participated, were also in the audience.

Prisoner on Stand

Florence Dugan's story, as related to the court on the direct examination, was the same in detail as that outlined by Attorney Nolan. She related her composure and gauged straight at her questioner except during some of the more unpleasant portions of her narrative, when she bowed her head. In the course of her narrative dating from her first acquaintance with Schumaker while working at the Saxton House in Darlen, and of the intimate relations which followed after she went to Clinton came to Janesville to work in the L. B. Carlo and other tobacco warehouses, and afterwards at the Riverside hotel, she said that he frequently reiterated his promise to marry her and that he took all of her earnings, amounting to between $10 and $20 besides forcing her to sell her $10 organ for $10 which he needed. It was at Darlen but some time after she had become intimate that she first heard that the man was married. He denied the accusation but she learned that it was true after she came to Janesville to live.

Knocked Down and Beaten

Just before the shooting affair she said that Schumaker knocked her down on Academy street because he wanted $7 from her and she only had $5, and in her room at the Riverside on the Monday night before the tragedy she said that he jerked her off the bed and jammed her against the door and said he would kill her if she didn't have the money by Saturday night. Prior to this time he had staid in her room on one occasion for a week, stating that he didn't feel like working and that his folks wouldn't let him stay with them. When he got his divorce two years ago, she said she gave him money which he used in paying for it.

Cross-Examination Begins

"I want to ask a few questions to throw more light on your evidence and not to annoy, Miss Dugan," said Attorney Wheeler in commencing the cross-examination. The attorney then commenced a minute inquiry into the woman's acquaintanceship at Darlen, asking about what she knew of Art Palmer, Harry Rodman, Ray Bigelow, Myron Richards, Mike McKinney, Edward Spoonbill, "Bud" Leeming, Bob Hahn, George Wright, and others and certain buggy rides to Delavan, Sharon, and other places.

"After you learned he was married and before he got his divorce, you didn't consider it wrong for him to go with another woman?"

"I didn't know as it was when they had parted and weren't living together."

"But you did think it was all wrong for him to leave you for another woman?"

"Well, I didn't think it right for him to ruin me and then take another woman."

"And you were willing to shoot him on that account?"

No Advice in Use of Gun

In the course of his questioning Atty. Wheeler elicited the information that Schumaker had taken two revolvers away from the defendant because she borrowed the one with which she shot him from General Hall, promising to pay the latter $1 for its use. Witness said she had learned to shoot on the farm and knew how to handle a revolver. She would not admit that she would have been willing to relinquish her claims on the man even if he had given back her rings and watch and money.

"After he told you to go to hell—" and said 'peck away, peck away' what did you do?"

"I did."

"Shot him—I suppose that is what he meant."

At three o'clock the defendant was still on the stand and Atty. Wheeler was continuing the grueling cross-examination, dwelling on details in many instances unfit to print. The courtroom was jammed and the outside door had to be locked.

At 3:30 Atty. Wheeler finished the cross-examination.

A POLITICAL PLAY OF EVERY DAY LIFE

Not Preachy But Teaches a Lesson to Those Who Were Fortunate Enough to be Present.

To use the above shallow cynicism of the hour; to have faith that right, not might, will triumph; to be true to one's best ideals; to believe with Carlyle that man is born to expend every particle of strength that God Almighty has given him in doing the work he finds he is fit for, to stand it out to the last breath of life and do his best—that is somebody or other's sympathy. It is also the lesson hammered in and riveted by the play called "The Man of the Hour."

Yet it is far from being a "preachy" play. The latter summoned from the towns courts to perform a mission in life strikes no attitudes; exerts no influence in no sounding periods. With a few words beyond his years, perhaps, he discerns the false promises and professions of cunning sophistry reared in the shadowy hinterland of right and wrong, and acts, using the powers at hand, to play the game; making a quarter in his efforts to eliminate the schemes of intriguing and dishonest men, and getting none. When he has achieved the persuasive values of corruption and bribery; when the conspirators with an ingenuously disloyal call upon him to choose between bending to their will of suffering his dead father's name to be dishonored; and when the very woman who has called him from the playground of life to do a man's part casts him off for a worthless trickerster, the real man emerges in all his glory and the final act of the play where the tangle is straightened and he comes into his own, is a lesson in itself.

William Lamp, as Alwyn Bennett, the youthful mayor, proved to be a strong actor of no mean ability. His portrayal of the latter transformed by love for a beautiful woman into a man of character was excellent. J. J. Doyle, as Charles Walworth, the tricky millionaire and jester of stocks and finances, was well carried out even to his final defeat by Bennett in the closing scene. Joseph O. LeBrasse, as Horridge the "boss," showed the ignorant man existing on graft, dominating the politics of a great city and sweeping all who opposed him out of the way. James Boyles as James Phelan, opponent to Horridge, an alderman of the crowded township district, with his annual pieties and dances, no better than Horridge but a "thief set to catch a thief," proved very acceptable. Thomas Chatterton as Perry Walworth proved to be a bright, breezy, up-to-date filler who furnished comedy in parts where comedy was needed in a most acceptable manner. Norma Winslow as Duff Bennett, for whose love Bennett was a man of the hour, was most natural. Her scenes with Bennett, with her uncle and Gibbs, were delightful bits of acting, no self-consciousness and her natural beauty enhanced her appearance upon the stage. Louise Everett as Cynthia Garrison, whose father ruled by the machine, was a most acceptable. Harriet Ross as Bennett's mother was soft and graceful and without strong for the right to conquer. Her advice to Bennett when told he must sacrifice his father's good name for principle was strong and pathetic. Frank M. Hendricks, Pierre Pelletier, G. E. Cole, Thos. E. Tracy, Chas. Mahoney, W. H. Carter and Henry C. Bender who took the other parts did so with a snap and vim. It was the part of Al. W. Bennett that Mayor Sherick took of Milwaukee was offered a thousand dollars a week to impersonate and refused. It is understood the company will play a return date later in the season.

MORTUARY NEWS.

Hubert Heinz.
The funeral of Hubert Heinz was held from the St. Mary's church at 9:30 this morning. The Rev. Gabriel officiating. Interment was made in St. Olaf cemetery.

A Blessing in Disguise.
Evening Wisconsin: The invalidity of the teachers' pension fund law will be learned of by many teachers with complacency. It will relieve them from the necessity of making a decision from which some of them shrink. Going into the enterprise meant for them a certain annual financial liability which would have increased the difficulty of making both ends meet. Staying out would have made some of them feel uneasy. They would have harbored distrustful doubt as to whether or not there would really be any difference between pensioners and non-pensioners as to tenure of positions. Therefore, instead of feeling aggrieved or disappointed by the declaration of the city attorney that the law is unconstitutional, they will be relieved and exhilarated by the news.

Teachers generally will never welcome the notion of a pension unless it is to be a gratuity—or, to speak less controversially, an addition to their salaries. As a class they do not feel that they are paid enough to enable them to make disbursements for a pension fund without applying to that purpose money which they require for other purposes more pressing.

A Western Apologue

I know a cuss called "Lonesome Dan," born cussedest an' trigger-quick. He was an ultra hold-up man. He took his toll on every trail. An' always dodged the rapin' ponies. At last he stopped—the U. S. mail. An' say! but there was dols'n't them. To make a buckin' broncho laugh! Where once he stood is just a dent. An' over that the epithet, "He bucked agin' the Government."

Perhaps our laws were made to break. With open scorn or crafty stealth; Perhaps 'tis impious to make A curb to cheek defiant wealth; Yet, men of iron, oke of coal, Yet, mighty magnets proud of spoil, Oh, corporations void of soul, Oh, solemn John exuding oil, Your Uncle Sam is meek and mild. But even his patience may be spent; So, take this candy from a child— "Don't buck agin' the Government!" —Puck.

"STATE BANKS"

In Wisconsin are safer than National Banks" is a statement made by a former deputy state bank examiner of Wisconsin. His reason for this statement is that more time and care are given to the examination of state banks. The state bank examiners are paid salaries, while the national bank examiners get no much for each examination, so the latter naturally try to get through their work as quickly as possible, while the state examiners take all the time needed for a thorough examination. The deputy examiner also states, "The Wisconsin banking laws, in my opinion, are the best of any state in the union."

We are a Wisconsin state bank and we are confident that with our ample resources and superior facilities we can offer you safe and convenient banking accommodations. We invite you to call.

CAPITAL AND SURPLUS

There is a difference between Capital and Surplus. The national banking law provides that the stockholders in a National bank shall be liable for twice the amount of their stock. No such liability attaches to surplus. It therefore follows that the same amount of money is twice as valuable to the depositor in the capital account as in the surplus. This also explains the provision of the law which makes it obligatory for a National bank in a town of this size to have a capital of one hundred thousand dollars, and to immediately accumulate a surplus of twenty percent of its capital.

Shanghai Gives TAFT BIG WELCOME.
CHINESE MERCHANTS HOLD RECEPTION IN HIS HONOR.

NATIVE WOMEN ASSIST
Function Marks Epoch in Their Status—American Residents Banquet the Secretary of War.

Shanghai, Oct. 9.—Secretary of War William H. Taft and the members of his party arrived here Tuesday from the steamer Minnesota, which is conveying him from Japan to Manila. The Chinese and the foreign residents of Shanghai united in giving the distinguished visitor the heartiest welcome that ever has been extended to a foreign statesman.

Tuesday afternoon Mr. Taft dedicated the building of the Young Men's Christian association. He made a brief address in which he said the work of the association among the Chinese was a great step in the interests of civilization, and he was followed by several Chinese officials who spoke in approval of the undertaking.

Entertained by Chinese Merchants.

At four o'clock the secretary was given an elaborate reception by the Chinese residents. This function was out of doors in a native garden. The decorations were most picturesque, embroidered banners and a multitude of Chinese lanterns making the garden look like a fairyland. The promoters of the reception were prominent Chinese merchants representing 45 of the guilds formerly in the boycott movements against American manufacturers. The change of sentiment was marked. A number of prominent Chinese officials were present.

Speeches of welcome were made in English by local Chinese business men officials and the representative of the viceroys. The Chinese emphasized the cordial relations existing between China and the United States, saying the friendship of America had been evidenced by sending relief to the famine sufferers, by the support of schools and hospitals, and by the waiving by the United States of her part of the Boxer indemnity. In reply Secretary Taft thanked the Chinese for their friendship toward the American people and government. At the conclusion of his address the secretary was presented with a handsome silver punch bowl.

Even the Women Present.
This reception marked an epoch in the matter of the status of women in China, for Chinese women of aristocratic families were present at the function and even presided at the tables where they served refreshments. This is the first time such a thing has happened in China. This Chinese welcome to the American visitor was most significant, and the merchants and high officials present contrasted it with Mr. Taft's former visit to Shanghai and the days of the American boycott.

Banqueted by Americans.
The American residents gave a banquet to the secretary in the evening. The foreign consuls and a number of prominent foreign business men were present. Mr. Taft made a speech which was listened to with deep interest. He prefaced his remarks by saying that he spoke as an American citizen, not as a representative of the government. He renewed his assurances that the United States had no intention of selling the Philippine islands, saying that the country was in honor bound to retain them or give the Philippines their independence.

The Opal Serpent

CHAPTER XIX.

APPARENTLY Mattilda Junk was quite ignorant of anything being wrong about her husband, although she did shrink the question regarding their possible visit to London in July. However, Hurd had learned that Gexon had not only been an old friend, but had been engaged to Mattilda for many months. This information made him the more certain that they had robbed her of the opal brooch at the time of the accident and that it had passed from Mr. Hay's hands into those of the assassin.

"I wonder if Mrs. Krill murdered her husband in that cruel way," thought the detective, sitting over his tea. "But what could have been her object? She could have gone up on learning from Hay that Aaron Norman was her husband, as I believe she did, and could then have made him give her the money by threatening him with the murder of Lady Rachel. I dare say Aaron Norman in his Krill days did strange things to get the opal brooch, and his wife could have used what she knew to govern him. There was no need of murder. Hurd! I'll see about getting the truth out of Hay, Aurora," he cried. "Oh, there you are," he added as she entered the room. "I want you to go back to town this night."

"What for, Billy?"

"Can you get Hay into trouble?"

Aurora nodded. "I have proofs of his cheating Lord George and others, if that's what you mean," she said, "but you didn't want them used."

"Nor do I. He's such an old he may wriggle out of our clutches, but can't you give a party and invite Lord George and Hay and then get them to play cards. Should Hay cheat, denounce him to George Sandell."

"What good would that do?" asked Miss Qian, with widely open eyes.

"It will make Hay confess about the brooch to save himself from public shame. His reputation is his life, remember, and if he is caught red handed cheating he'll have to clear out of town."

"Pooh, as if that mattered! He's going to marry Miss Krill."

"If Miss Krill keeps the money, and I don't if she will."

"But, Billy—"

"Never mind. Don't ask me any more questions, but go and pack. This Captain Jessop is in the bar drinking. I may probably have to arrest him. I got a warrant on the chance of finding him here. I can arrest him on suspicion and won't let him go until I get at the truth. Your business is to bring Hay to his knees and get the truth out of him about the opal serpent. You know the case?"

"Yes," grumbled Aurora, "I know the case, but I don't like this long journey tonight."

"Every moment is precious. If I arrest Jessop, Mattilda Junk will tell her Indian, who will speak to Hay, and then he may slip away. As the brooch evidence is so positive and as—"

Miss Qian nodded and went away to pack. She wanted money and knew Billy would give her a goodly share of the reward. In a few minutes Miss Junk of the Red Pig learned that Miss Qian was suddenly summoned to town and would leave in an hour. Quite unsuspectingly she assisted her to pack, and shortly Aurora was driving in a hired vehicle to the railway station on her way to trap Gexon Hay.

When she was safely off the premises, Hurd walked to the telephone and sent a cipher message to the Yard, asking for a couple of plain clothes policemen to be sent down. He wanted to have Hurd and Miss Mattilda Junk watched, also the house, in case Mrs. Krill and her daughter should return. Captain Jessop he proposed to look after himself. But he was in no hurry to make that gentleman's acquaintance, as he intended to arrest him quietly in the sitting room after dinner. Already he had informed Mattilda that he would ask a gentleman to join him at the meal and taste Hurd's curry.

The thought of the curry brought the Indian to his mind, and when he got back to the Red Pig he strolled round the house, inspecting the place, but in reality keeping eyes and ears open to talk to the Indian. Thinking he might meet the man some time, Hurd had carefully learned a few phrases relating to things—in English, of course, since he knew nothing of the Indian tongue. These he proposed to use in the course of conversation with Hurd and watch the effect. Soon he found the man sitting cross-legged under a tree in the yard, smoking. Evidently his work for the day was over, and he was enjoying himself. Remembering the description given by Bart, the detective said that this was the very man who had entered the shop of Aaron Norman. He wore the same dress and looked dirty and disreputable—quite a contrast to a stray.

"Hello!" said Hurd casually. "What are you doing? Talk English, eh?"

"Yes, sir," said Hurd calmly. "I spoke good English. Missionary teach Hurd English."

"I'm glad of that; we can have a chat," said Hurd, producing his pipe. He also produced something else with which he had provided himself on the way back from the postoffice. In another minute Hurd was staring at a small parcel of coarse brown sugar. With all his oriental phlegm the man could not keep his countenance. His eyes rolled until they threatened to drop out of his head, and he looked at Hurd with a certain amount of fear. "Good!" said that gentleman, pointing to the sugar with the stem of his pipe, "good!"

Hurd turned green under his dark skin and half rose to go away, but his legs failed him, and he sat still trying to recover himself. "So you worship Bhownee?" went on his tormentor.

The Indian's face expressed lively curiosity. "The great goddess?"

"Yes, Kadee, you know. Did you make Taponnee after you used your room on Aaron Norman?"

Kadee gave a guttural cry and gasped. Taponnee is the sacrilegious name by which the handkerchief with which they strangled their victims. All this was information culled from Colonel Meadow Taylor's book by the accomplished detective. "Well," said Hurd, smoking placidly, "what have you to say, Mr. Hurd?"

"I know nozzel," said the man suddenly, but in deadly fear.

"Yes, you do. Sit still!" said Hurd, with sudden sternness. "If you try to run away I'll have you arrested. Eyes on you, and you can't take a step without my knowing."

Some of this was Greek to the Indian, owing to his imperfect knowledge of English, but he understood that the law would lay hold of him if he did not obey this subtle and so sat still. "I know nozzel," he repeated, his teeth chattering.

"Yes, you do. You're a thing," "Zee no thing."

"I agree with you," said Hurd. "You are the best of the Mohicans. I want to know why you offered Aaron Norman to Bhownee?"

Hurd made a strange sign on his forehead at the mention of the sacred name and muttered something—perhaps a prayer—in his native tongue. Then he looked up. "I know nozzel."

"Don't repeat that rubbish," said Hurd calmly. "You said best faces in the shop in Gwynne street on the day when its master was killed, and he was the husband of the lady who helped you—Mrs. Krill."

"You say so," said Hurd stolidly. "Yes, and I can prove it. The boy Tray—and I can buy my hands on him—saw you; also that Tayney, the shopman. You left a handful of sugar, though why you did so instead of eating it I can't understand."

Hurd's face lighted up, and he showed his teeth dismally. "Oh, you sabhis know nozzel!" said he, spreading out his lean hands. "Zee shops—all, yis. I there, yis, but I use no nozzel!"

"Not then, but you did later."

Hurd shook his head. "I use no nozzel. Zee sabhis one eye—bad, ver bad. Bhownee no have one eye, No Bhownee, no Bhata, no—"

"What are you talking about?" said Hurd angrily. His reading had not told him that no maimed persons could be offered to the goddess of the thug. Bhownee meant sweepers, and Bhata bards, both of which classes were spared by the stranglers. "You killed that man. Now, who told you to kill him?"

"I know nozzel. I no kill. Bhownee no take one eye man."

For want of an interpreter Hurd found it difficult to carry on the conversation. He rose and determined to postpone further examination till he would get some one who understood the Hindoo tongue. But in the meantime Hurd might run away, and Hurd rather regretted that he had been so precipitate. However, he nodded to the man and went off, pretty sure he would not fly at once.

Then Hurd went to the village police office and told a buccle constable to keep his eye on Miss Junk's "foreigner," as he learned Hurd was called. The policeman, a smooth faced individual, promised to do so after Hurd produced his credentials, and sauntered toward the Red Pig at some distance from the detective's heels. A timely question about the curry revealed, by the month of Miss Junk, that Hurd was still in the kitchen. "But he do seem alarmed like," said Mattilda, laying the cloth.

"Let's hope he won't spoil the curry," remarked Hurd. Then, knowing Hurd was safe, he went into the bar to make the acquaintance of his other victim.

Captain Jarvey Jessop quite answered to the description given by Bart. He was large and sailorlike, with red hair mixed with gray and a red beard that scarcely concealed the scar running from temple to mouth. He had drunk enough to make him cheerful and was quite willing to fall into conversation with Hurd, who explained himself unnecessarily. "I'm a commercial gent," said the detective, calling for two rum, plain, "and I like talking."

"Me, too," growled the sailor, grasping his glass. "I'm here on what you'd call a visit, but I go back to my home tomorrow. Then I'll be for Calcutta," he shouted in a slurring voice.

Hurd knew the three old chanty and sized Captain Jarvey up at once. He was of the buccaneer type, and there was little he would not do to make money and have a roaring time. Pulling Hurd, with his deadly handkerchief, here was the man who might have killed Aaron Norman. "Drink up," shouted Hurd in his turn, "we'll have some more."

"On no condition, is extradition allowed in Calcutta."

"Gum," said Captain Jessop, "you know the chanty."

Hurd winked. "I've been round about in my time."

Jessop stretched out a huge hand. "Put it there, mate," said he, with a roar like a foghorn, "and drink up along of me. My treat."

Hurd nodded and became jovial. "On condition you join me at dinner. They make good curries here."

"I've had curries," said Captain Jessop heavily, "in Colombo and Hongkong frequent, but Hurd's curries are the best."

"Ah!" said Hurd in a friendly, curious way. "So you know this shanty?"

Jessop looked at him with contempt. "Know this shanty?" said he, with a

"Bhownee no take one eye man," grin. "Why, in course I do. I've been swinging my hammock here there in and out for the last thirty year."

"You'll be a Christchurch man, then?"

"Not me, mate. I'm Buckinghamshire—Stowley born."

OIL TRUST'S WAY OF LIQUIDATING

PROCESSES OF ALLEGED DISSOLUTION ARE REVEALED.

PRETENSE SAYS KELLOGG

Facts and Figures Obtained from the Standard's Books—Profits and Dividends of Ten Years.

New York, Oct. 9.—From statements culled from ledgers and books found in the office of the Standard Oil company Frank B. Kellogg, counsel for the United States government, succeeded in placing on Tuesday's record of the federal proceedings against the oil combine the processes and stages through which the combine passed in its changes from the old Standard Oil trust to the present Standard Oil company of New Jersey.

Out of the maze of figures developed in a voluminous mass from the company's books, and from testimony given by Clarence G. Fay, assistant auditor of the Standard, the government's counsel says he believes he has proved the federal allegation that the Standard is an illegal corporation and by devious devices has maintained its entity, and that it is under the same ownership as when it was formed.

Called Disolution a Pretense.

Mr. Kellogg says he is of the opinion that, notwithstanding the government was unable to discover the transfer books and stock ledgers of the liquidating trustees, the evidence adduced Tuesday shows that the so-called oil trust only affected to dissolve under the order of the Ohio courts in 1892, and that its direction is still held by those who had to do with the formation of the Standard Oil trust.

Statements submitted Tuesday showed in brief that at the inception of the Standard Oil trust in 1882 there was $70,000,000 in trust certificates issued for stocks of various companies which entered into the combine. In the trust period from 1882 to 1892 a stock dividend of $16,000,000 was declared, and this, with other stocks issued for plant purchases, brought the total capitalization of the Standard up to $87,000,000. As a result of a decision of the supreme court of Ohio forbidding the trustees from voting the trust certificates there was a resolution passed directing that the trust be dissolved.

How They "Liquidated."

Mr. Fay read a statement in the record showing that the day following the passage of that resolution 61 subsidiary companies were consolidated with the Standard Oil company of New Jersey, and 49 other subsidiaries of the trust. Seven months later, on November 30, 1892, the witness read from statements, there were 494,619 trust certificates presented for cancellation and to the holders were given their pro rata shares in the 20 subsidiary companies which then made up the trust. There were also offered for cancellation two months later some 20,000 trust certificates. There was a lapse of over four years before another certificate was presented for cancellation.

Profits and Dividends.

For the first time the profits and dividends of the Standard Oil trust, from its inception in 1882 to 1891, were made public Tuesday. The profits, as stated by Mr. Fay, were as follows:

1882, $12,388,507; 1883, $11,231,790; 1884, $7,778,205; 1885, $8,382,935; 1886, $15,350,787; 1887, $14,026,590; 1888, $12,757,727; 1889, $14,815,201; 1890, $10,131,470; 1891, $14,331,890.

The dividends declared by the Standard Oil trust from 1882 to 1891 were spread on the records as follows:

1882, $3,995,253; 1883, $4,208,086; 1884, $4,288,842; 1885, $7,470,222; 1886, $7,225,452; 1887, $8,443,327; 1888, $10,225,277; 1889, $10,420,630; 1890, $11,200,000; 1891, $11,618,825.

Answers in Gould Lines Sult.

Jefferson City, Mo., Oct. 9.—Answers were filed in the supreme court Tuesday by the Missouri Pacific, Washash & Iron Mountain railroads, the Pacific Express company and the American Refrigerator Transit company, to the order sent of the attorney general. The answers admit that the Missouri Pacific owns a majority of stock in the Iron Mountain railroad, but asserts that the two roads are not competing lines and that under the law they could consolidate, but they are operated as separate lines, with business connection. The answers further admit that the Missouri Pacific owns stock in the other companies.

RAIN STOPS THE HUNTING Farm and City Property For Sale.

PRESIDENT IS KEPT IN HIS CAMP BY WET WEATHER.

No Bear Have Been Sighted Yet, Though the Dogs Struck a Promising Trail.

Stanhoul, La., Oct. 9.—Secretary Latta returned Tuesday from his visit to the president in the latter's camp on the Texas river, bringing with him a batch of newly-dictated letters and recollections of a very wet night spent in camp.

He said that Monday's rain was even more than was bargained for and that while the first effect was to put the woods in good condition, they became so wet by two o'clock that the party was compelled to return to camp. The rain, which had begun early in the day, continued throughout the night and it was decided not to venture out at all Tuesday, owing to the water in the swamps.

No one has yet sighted a bear, but the dogs found a trail Monday and the professional hunters expressed the belief that the hunting meant they had located a real bear. It was dark, however, and it became necessary to call the hunt off. The president puts in much of his time when not engaged in the hunt in reading and in conversation with his associates and the guides and hunters who accompany them.

GRIDIRON POINTERS.

Speed and Developed Strategy
Vs. Beef Hurling Tactics.

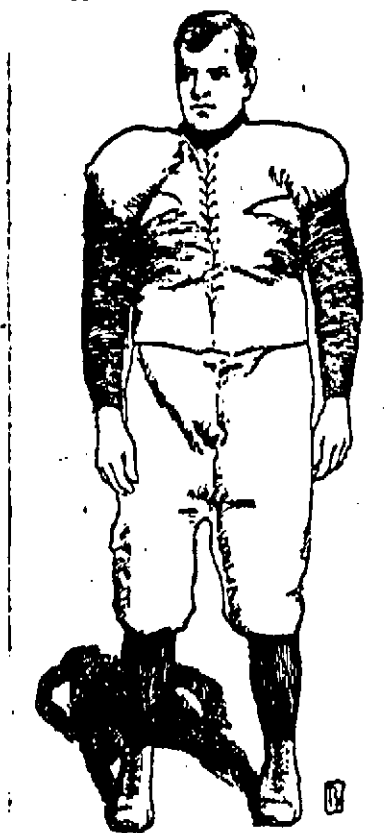

HARVARD DEPENDS ON BURR.

Able Kicking Guard Will, It Is Thought,
Prove a Big Aid to Team Under Present Rules—Forbes of Yale West Point Coach.

In the preliminary work at some of the big eastern universities there has been an absence of the beef hurling, line smashing tactics with which the college giants formerly overwhelmed their lighter opponents. Under the "new" football code speed and highly developed strategy are looked upon as the possible factors in upsetting the old established supremacy of the larger colleges. Luck enters more prominently than ever too.

Captain Parker of Harvard, a heavy-weight line-man, is alert to the possibilities of open field football, the inside kick and the forward pass. With several veterans, among them men who met defeat at New Haven last fall, when Yale showed thoroughly better understanding of the modern style of gridiron work, Captain Parker is building up the speed of the crimson players. Head Coach Joshua Crane, the amateur polo player and racket expert, has impressed Harvard players and undergraduates with his skill as a director.

Coach Crane has introduced several innovations, among them that of open practice for the entire season. In announcing this policy football followers see a reflection of the sentiment which President Eliot has always expressed in his criticisms of college football. With all secrecy removed, Coach Crane believes that it will be possible to win the support of some Harvard men who now object to football because of the alleged "ungentlemanly and unsportsmanlike" phase of the sport.

With the great All-American guard, Frank Burr, again in action, Harvard has one of the strongest punters of recent years. Many believe that in Burr's kicking power Harvard has one of the most effective methods possible of making profitable use of the rules.

In Captain Parker, Burr and Pierce Harvard has three line men. McDonald, Kennard and Starr are again practicing for the ends, and Wendell, Appollone and Nowhall are experienced men behind the line.

Yale is said to have already got the jump on Harvard in practice work. A big gathering of former freshmen players and subs on last year's great team have been rapidly working off the rough edges.

For the past three weeks Bob Forbes, formerly of Yale, and the army coaches have been laboring hard with a squad of ninety-five men at the West Point Military Academy, drilling them in the rudiments of football.

It has been arranged to give the football men a late supper, thus allowing them about an hour's practice daily after drills. By Sultan's graduation a new center will have to be found. Philson and Hooton both played at the position last season and are out for the place. Fowler, who played tackle in the style last year, has just recovered from typhoid fever and will not be permitted to play.

TURF BODY HAS NEW RULE.

Bookmakers and Jockeys Not Allowed to Operate While Owning Racers.

The Kentucky racing commission recently took action against bookmakers and jockeys operating or riding at tracks where they own horses entered at the meeting, adopting the following resolutions: "Any person who owns, wholly or in part, or is interested, directly or indirectly, in any book made on races at any meeting shall not be permitted while being interested in such book to race, train or ride any horse upon any track so licensed, and for any violation of this rule the guilty party shall be ruled off."

Lafayette was denied four additional days, and Louisville was allotted sixteen days from Oct. 10 to Nov. 2, inclusive, beginning just after Lafayette.

ROGERS AFTER "HACK."

O'Rourke's New Wrestler-Fighter
Goes Abroad to Meet Champion.

Should Joe Rogers, wrestler and fighter, who sailed recently for England with his manager, Tom O'Rourke, be successful in securing a match with George Hackenschmidt the contest will be the first of a series of international contests on the mat. Hackenschmidt announced recently that he intends to come to America and take on Frank Gotch and any others who are plodding for a match with him.

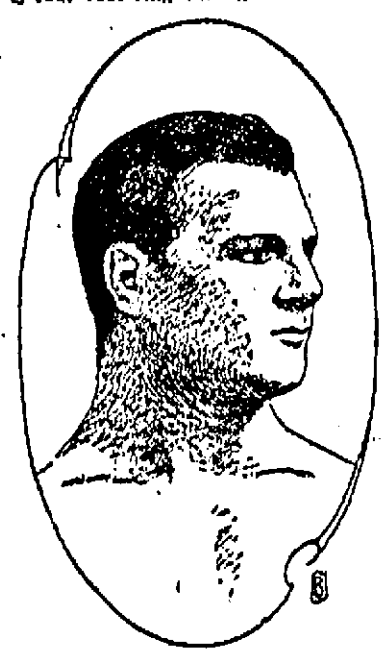

The "Russian Lion" is the champion wrestler of the world, but O'Rourke and Rogers are both confident that the latter is the better wrestler, and they are determined to make a desperate effort to bring the championship back with them.

Rogers is a bigger man than Hackenschmidt. The American weighs 245 pounds when in condition for a wrestling match, and Hackenschmidt's weight is 220. But it is doubtful if Rogers is as strong as the "Russian Lion." Both men know pretty much about each other's style, for it was while training Hackenschmidt that Rogers became imbued with the idea of being a wrestler.

When Rogers lands in England there will be scores of grapplers who will want to wrestle him, and he will have to take some of them on to show that he is worthy of a match with Hackenschmidt. The "Russian Lion" has only recently recovered from an illness, but he claims to be in excellent condition again and probably will be willing to meet Rogers if a suitable side bet or purse is offered.

Rogers has some aspirations for pugilistic honors also. He has been training for months, and Tom O'Rourke gave him a try-out at a boxing show a few months ago, but he did not show any alarming form. He announced before sailing that he would try to arrange a boxing match with Hackenschmidt whether he won or lost on the mat. Hackenschmidt has been making sounds like a prize fighter of late and has challenged Jeffries.

If "individual supremacy," of which the prince of fighters, Jack O'Brien, speaks, could be attained in the twenty-four foot ring through the medium of physical development alone Joe Rogers would have the other heavyweights, including James Jeffries, faded to a mere whisper. Rogers is more imposing in almost all physical attributes than the great Jeffries, and if he possessed the same pugilistic skill as the bellerophoner there can be no doubt that he would easily vanquish the retired champion. Rogers and Jeff are the same height, each standing six feet one and three-quarter inches. Jeff when in battle trim weighs about 220 pounds. Rogers is fifty-five inches about the chest to fifty inches for Jeff, and the former has a forty-three inch waist to thirty-five inches for the latter. Rogers' neck measure is nineteen and one-half inches to seventeen and one-half inches for Jeff, and his biceps, forearm, thigh and calf are all larger than those possessed by the redoubtable Jeffries. In age Rogers has the advantage of five years, being only twenty-seven, while Jeff is thirty-two. Rogers also resembles Jeff, being dark, swarthy and hairy breasted, and has the rugged build of the champion.

Unfortunately for Rogers, mere bulk does not cut much of a figure in the prize ring, for if it did Ed Dundhorst, the human freight car, would have been champion long ago. As Rogers has done a great deal of wrestling, the chances are he would be deficient in boxing skill, as he is too old to learn many new tricks. The chances are that Jeffries would dispose quickly of the horribles Rogers, and it is not unlikely that other heavier, less formidable than Jeff, also would take the measure of the big wrestler. If Rogers had approximately the same boxing skill as Jeff a meeting between them would be one of the greatest in the history of the ring. It would develop into a struggle between titan thumpers and a question of which had the greater endurance.

If the men were to meet in the ring, which is extremely improbable, it would be the first time Jeffries ever had faced a man who possessed the also necessary to make the contest look like a good match.

Sutton Accepts Challenge.

George Sutton, the world's champion of 182 billiards, has accepted the challenge issued by Jack Schaefer, and they will meet in a match of 500 points at Orchestra hall, Chicago, Nov. 5.

SUPPLYING THE PROOF

"Just look at her now!" said the girl in the green bathing suit, moodily.

"The Sixth Man."

"You don't suppose I'd be wasting time looking at anything else, do you?" inquired the girl in the red bathing suit who was trying to dry her hair. "And he came only this morning!"

"He is the sixth man she has let teach her how to swim," pursued the girl in the green bathing suit. "It's the finest, cleverest sort of scheme and whenever I think that my idiosyncrasy and valiant glorious pride led me to dive ten times off the dock and swim clear to the next landing when I first went into the water here I could cry!" "It certainly was foolish," agreed the one in the red bathing suit. "Still, most men admire girls who are athletic."

"Not when they are tiny blondes with appealing eyes and a habit of crying: 'Oh, don't leave me! I'm afraid!'" remarked the young woman in the green bathing suit, shaking out her pompadour. "Pooh!" snapped the other. "It takes an expert to pretend to drown the way she does! I'd like to catch her! I'll warrant if the truth were known she could outswim any one here! I thought she'd be satisfied with Crofton and the doctor and Tom Hately and give the rest of us a chance at this fascinating lawyer—but here she goes and grabs him, too! I'd give my head to get even with her!"

"It really is a duty we owe to ourselves," mused the girl in the green bathing suit as she polished a champagne shell on the sand. "There certainly is nothing malicious in opening a man's eyes to the fact that he is being deceived. When you come to think of it there is something very selfish in taking up a person's time by having him teach you how to swim and keeping him from swimming on his own account!"

"There certainly is!" agreed the girl in the red bathing suit, sitting up with awakened interest. "And no doubt he'd be very grateful to any one who showed him how he was being duped!"

"Yes, indeed," agreed the girl in green, getting to her feet and looking over her shoulder at her bathing cap. "I've an idea. You don't mind a ducking?"

The girl in red scrambled up also. "Ducking!" she echoed, scornfully. "I'd stay at the bottom of the lake a whole day and take my meals there cheerfully if I could pay her back—I mean rescue him! What are you going to do?"

The girl in green was making for a canoe drawn up on the beach. "The doctor and Tom Hately are just coming down in to the shore, too," she said, reflectively.

"Miss Crimble!" she called as the little blonde neared shore. "Don't you want to come out in the canoe with us? We'll be very careful because we know you can't swim!"

The little blonde looked doubtful. She hated to abandon the lawyer at such an early and critical stage of his devotion, but being wise in the ways of her kind she hated to antagonize the two leading girls at the hotel.

"Thank you," she said, wading to shore, "but I'm so timid! You are sure it is safe?"

"Perfectly!" chorused the two executioners.

The three paddled away. It was good deep water where the canoe, suddenly and from no apparent cause, tipped over.

The three men on shore plunged in simultaneously when the shrieks arose. They knew the girl in red and her friend in green were good swimmers and hoped desperately the two would have presence of mind enough to hold up the poor little blonde girl till help arrived.

It was the doctor who first nearly went under because in his amazement he forgot to swim. The other men followed suit. Ahead of them, out in the deep water, callously abandoned by the girls in green and red, the little blonde was swimming for dear life toward them and shore, swimming with the skill of a professional athlete.

Everybody reached shore about the same time. It was a trying moment. The girls in red and green looked radiant and innocent, the little blonde had dripping hair and a faraway soul and the three men were strangely speechless.

But joy sung in the hearts of the conspirators in red and green, for they knew the tide had turned.

Even the Farmers Hesitate

THE MORAL OF PORT ROYAL.

Something We Can Learn from the Teachings of History.

It is possible to crush and destroy that which was meant in the mind of God to be a power for good in the church. And it is possible on the other hand, for holy and noble souls to make mistakes and to be overmuch occupied in attention to one aspect of truth, to forget that the whole is greater than the part, and that the whole body must be "fitly framed and knit together through that which every joint supplieth." If the body is to be built up in love. There is nothing which we more neglect than the teachings of history; there is nothing which will at once so cheer and so warm us as those teachings. In a book, the value of which is out of all proportion to its size, an eminent professor of ecclesiastical history has told us how to use these teachings. The diverging tendencies of spiritual thought alike "spring from the teaching of our Lord himself. They are not antagonistic, but complementary, they are both necessary to the church." When shall we learn this lesson, when will those who keep the Christian creed whole and undivided recognize that these always must be divergent? The Puritan, the Catholic, or, as it is so well put in Dr. Biggs' book, the mystic and the disciplinarian, will always be found side by side in the Catholic church. The story of Port Royal is the story of these divergences in thought—Jesuit and Port Royalist represented two tendencies. The seventeenth century was not ripe for toleration. Port Royal was crushed, and crushed because it stood for what was unwelcome to the worldly world.—From "The Story of Port Royal," by Ethel Romanes.

BIG FORKS FOR ESKIMOS.

Table Implements That Had to Be Made to Order.

Six hundred and forty forks, silver plated and each a foot long, formed a part of the baggage of E. Tannell Doey, who left Philadelphia recently for Point Barrow, Alaska, says the Philadelphia Record. Each of the forks weighed a pound and a half, and the whole accordingly weighed nearly half a ton. The forks were in packages of 10 each, 64 packages in all, and the whole divided into two halves of 32 packages each. Mr. Doey takes them to Point Barrow, the most northerly point in American Alaska, as presents to the chief Eskimo tribes there and their members, in pursuance of a promise made two years ago. Then the forks of a visiting American party enormously impressed the natives, who watched their use with deep interest. Some criticism having been offered to the small size of the fork, which, perhaps, suffered by comparison with a walrus harpoon, Mr. Doey had those made to order. He left for Seattle on his way northward and expects to return with a large supply of walrus ivory, timing his return trip with the "open water" of 1908.

Gigantic Potatoes.

Big potatoes which weigh as much as a man are not often seen. A small consignment of them, however, has just been sent off from the West Indies. There were just six potatoes, and each was large enough to feed a big family. Yam is the popular name applied to this variety of giant sweet potato. The tubers usually attain a length of three feet and an average weight of 30 pounds. Yams weighing from 100 to 150 pounds, however, are by no means uncommon in the West Indies and other parts of the tropics where they thrive. In appearance the yams look much like the ordinary potatoes on a greatly enlarged scale. They are black or brown externally and pale within, and are rich in starch. When boiled they have a very pleasant flavor.

GOOD TEST FOR NICOTINE.

Experiments That May Be of Interest to Smokers.

"Anyone who wishes to find out how much nicotine he might take into his system by smoking can easily get an idea by a very simple experiment," says an old smoker, who is rarely seen in public or private without a cigar in his mouth. "Put briskly until the cigar smoke is clear white then draw a big mouthful, double your handkerchief, place it over your lips and blow out the smoke violently as though you were whistling. Look at your handkerchief and you will see a deep brown stain almost as big as a dime on the white linen. That is the nicotine and other oils distilled from the tobacco during burning. Now, of course, I don't mean to say that regular smoker would absorb all this oil into his system. Most of it passes away with the smoke, as shown by the brown deposit on the handkerchief, but still enough remains to affect the nerves, as any inexperienced smoker can testify after his first attempts to become accustomed to the weed. Whether the nicotine hurts anybody who is used to it is a question for the doctors."

EFFECTS OF THE FOG.

Even Blind Men Lose Their Way—The Ground "Sounds Different."

Nothing has such a bewildering effect as fog. Only animals which find their way by scent can get about in it with any certainty, says Chums. Birds are entirely confused by it. Turkeys remain all day motionless and half-asleep, huddled up, either in or just outside their houses. Chickens remain motionless for hours during heavy fogs. No bird sings or utters a call, perhaps because it fears to betray its whereabouts to an unseen foe. During one very thick fog a blind man was found wandering about a certain district of London. This man was in the habit of carrying notes and parcels, and had scarcely ever lost his way before. Asked why he had gone astray, for he was quite blind, and it was supposed that weather would have made no difference, he said that in a fog the ground "sounded quite differently."

Mixtures of Thought in Dreams. Consider the wild mixtures of thought, displayed both in the waking life and the dreams of mankind. How grand! How mean! How sudden the leap from one to the other! How inscrutable the succession! How defiant of orderly control! It is as if the soul were a thinking rain; which it verily is. The angel and the demon life appear to be contending in it. The imagination revels in beauty exceeding all the beauty of things, walls in images dire and monstrous, wallows in murderous and base suggestions that shame our inward dignity; so that a great part of the study and a principal art of life is to keep our decency by a wise selection from what we think and a careful suppression of the remainder.—Horace Bushnell.

Crown of Great Britain.

The crown is already of great weight—35 ounces and 5 dwts. To add to it the Cullinan diamond would increase the weight by about three-quarters of a pound avoirdupois, which, it is estimated, is what the jewel would weigh after it is cut. The crown, as it is seen today in the Tower of London, contains 2,818 diamonds, 297 pearls and many other exquisite jewels. Its chief gem is the ruby, the value of which has been estimated at £100,000, which was given to the Black Prince in Spain in the year 1367, and was worn by Henry V. in his helmet at the battle of Agincourt.

Buy It In Janesville.

To contradict certain talk and to put the consuming public in possession of the truth, we say in plain words that no one in this town can sell as good coffee as Arbuckles' Ariosa for as little money.

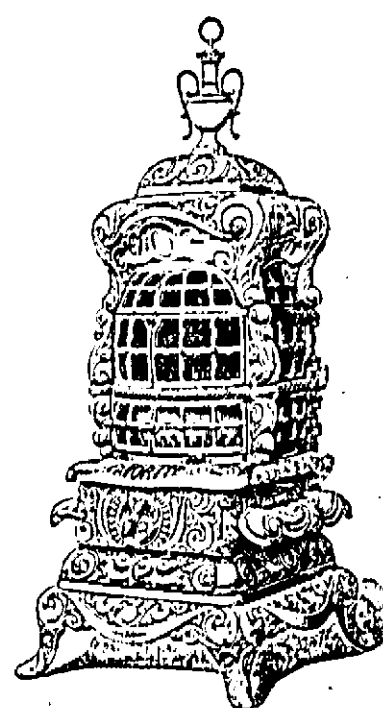

Misbranded and make-believe Mocha and Java, or coffee sold loose out of a bag or a bin, is not as good value for the money, nor can it be sold at as narrow profit, nor reach the consumer under as favorable conditions.

When you buy Arbuckles' Ariosa Coffee you get more than 16 net ozs. of straight, wholesome Brazilian coffee from the largest coffee firm in the world, with that firm's direct assurance that they are giving you the best coffee in the world for the money.
